Local Food Resources

Detroit

There are many Detroit Michigan free food pantries, soup kitchens and distribution centers that provide a variety of resources to the low income as well as needy in the region. Dozens of locations across all of Wayne County provide free food, hot meals, paper products, baby formula, and much more. There are even soup kitchens scattered across the city as well as county, and every year tens of thousands of families turn to the centers for help.

The food banks of course provide the basics such as free food, groceries, produce, baby formula, frozen items, breads, personal supplies, and a number of other services. However there are also staff that direct qualified low income families to everything from emergency SNAP food stamp applications to Meals on Wheels programs. Some centers even can provide free meals at Christmas or Thanksgiving, as well as holiday gifts for children. To the type of aid at each non-profit center is extensive.

In addition, while not as well known, a food bank is a great place to call or stop by to learn about other assistance programs available. For example, learn about both state of Michigan and federal government benefit programs. If needed referrals are also given to other locations in Wayne County that offer food or other assistance, including financial. For example, learn about where to go for clothing, or get help in applying for food stamps or WIC. The food pantries in Detroit and Wayne County provide extensive assistance.
